He summoned the crowd again and said to them, "Hear me, all of you, and understand. Nothing that enters one from outside can defile that person; but the things that come out from within are what defile."

Mark 7:21

Many Christians today cannot appreciate the serious nature of the charges being leveled against Jesus' disciples. The public charge of the Pharisees and scribes that Jesus' disciples "do not follow the tradition of the elders" was an attempt to accuse Jesus and his disciples of unlawful behavior and, in effect, call into question the legitimacy of Jesus and his ministry. The very ones who demanded strict observance of their law fail to observe God's law. Jesus uses this encounter to teach a deeper lesson. He insists that defilement originates from the innermost recesses of the heart, not from some external behavior.

A group of pilgrims were visiting Chartres Cathedral and its great labyrinth - the circular walkway outlined on the church floor that pilgrims and penitents have prayerfully "walked" for centuries.

An older man and woman stood near the entrance watching visitors slowly walk the labyrinth. Then the woman took off her shoes and handed them, with her purse, to her husband. As he watched, she began to walk the intricate path. She cried as she walked; he cried watching her. When they pulled themselves together, they explained to a concerned onlooker that they had come to Chartres to celebrate the end of the woman's treatment from breast cancer. They had never heard of a labyrinth before they walked into the cathedral that day. She could not explain why she was drawn to walk it, but when she did her husband decided to hold down the center, giving thanks for her life while she made her way out of the labyrinth.

"I began to feel at peace with my body again after being very angry that it had let me down," the woman explained. As she walked, she found herself remembering all the people who had walked with her through her surgery and treatment. "I now know why we came." (From An Altar in the World by Barbara Brown Taylor.)
